Q: How to check if a key is in a PHP array? How would you check if a key exists in an array? I want to check if a variable that is a key exists in the array, so that it will return the value of the key. A: Use the `array_key_exists()` function. `$keys = array('foobar','foo','bar');` `$value = $array['foobar'];` `if (array_key_exists('foobar',$array)) { echo $value; }` A: `if (array_key_exists('foo', $array)) { echo 'foo!'; }` A: try with `if(array_key_exists('key',$array)){ echo 'key'; }`

-temperature reactors—are not particularly good for plutonium. That's why they get burned up or cast up. Plutonium is pyrophoric. That is, it loves to burn. Think about it. If you light a match in a can of gasoline, does the match stick? No. Because the heat drives out the oxygen from the mix, making a dry tinder. That's pyrophoricity in a nutshell. Plutonium loves to burn. The trick, of course, is getting it to do that as part of a fusion reaction. The problem is, you need temperatures thousands of degrees Celsius higher than those that exist inside a thermonuclear reactor. Now, you can warm a "small" fusion reactor in an ordinary furnace, but you're talking about a 10,000°C plasma that starts at about 15,000°C, with peak densities of 10,000 g/cc and a rate of magnetic pressure more than 100 times that of Earth's. Since that's more than 10,000 times the heat of burning a stick of dynamite, you need to control the reactions. To do that, you use magnetic fields—and those fields are stronger than the magnets you'd need to generate them. To generate the fields inside a fusion reactor, you need to energize four coils in series: two for the "driver" field and two for "mirror" fields. The driver
