Carbonimals are a great way to obtain carbon from hard to extract sources. Some other source of carbon that might be easier to come by is using biomass for fuel. Producing biomass fuel is a very energy intensive process that is currently being pursued at a small scale level. I decided to make a small scale test to see if I could run a biomass furnace using only cardboard tubes. I bought 4 boxes of hardboard tubes and a 200W heater kit. This is the test I run to determine the best tube for a biomass furnace. The idea is that the tube will be cut in half in order to maximize the internal surface area for combustion. First, I cut the tubes into roughly 2" diameter pieces. I then cut along the length of each tube to separate it into two pieces. I then inserted the 2 length pieces into the furnace and inserted the bottom of the furnace into a bucket of hot water. The hot water helped to soften the cardboard
