To help minimize any problems during upgrades, the internal LLVMLink project facilitates upgrading and migrating your existing installations by automating the steps to preserve your custom workflows and application settings. llvm-link supports automatic migration on all operating system platforms and user environments. The easiest way to verify the migration process is to download the installation packages and check with the llvm-link --help command line. You should find the llvm-link utility command along with migration and update steps. If you already have experienced installing the LLVM Project in previous releases, this is a migration step which will utilize the same install location as previous installations. If you want to change the install location, you can specify a new location as the first parameter on the llvm-link command line. You can unzip the installation packages to an arbitrary location on your system, and then migrate from the existing LLVM installation as follows: Unzip the archives in the specified location and use the llvm-link --help command line to verify that migration works. The migration will perform clean installs of all third party dependencies and build your applications with the new LLVM version in use. The new version of LLVM comes with new version of the LLVM compiler and optimized headers which will be embedded in to the installed binaries. It is important that your installation is in a consistent state, so you can skip this step to ensure smooth LLVM migration for your existing LLVM installation. Here you will see the list of commands that can be run to unzip the LLVM archives and to reset your existing LLVM configuration for a migration process. Unzip LLVM using the default location on your system. Clone the most recent LLVM source files from GitHub and use the cloned source to build LLVM. The next step is to update the existing config/config.sh file. This is necessary to resolve any migration process which may be required. Finally, you will need to remove the legacy LLVM libraries which have been built into the existing LLVM installation. clang libclang-llvm libclang3 libclang3.dylib llvm-runtime llvm-runtime llvm-runtime
