The revised version delays plug-ins updates by two weeks. The changes have not yet pushed the update to the cloud, but they have modified the way you get worked on third-party plug-ins while Photoshop opens. In previous versions, you had to log in to Adobe Network Manager. That is no longer necessary, and the latest plug-in updates now show up in Photoshop without having to log in. I am not sure, however, how quickly Adobe will be able to push these updates to the cloud. My guess is that the next automatic update will include these plug-ins as well as the new engine update. Adobe is also taking advantage of the cloud to make changes to the active file. For instance, if you select the Clone feature in a selection, the present selection is copied to another layer in the same document without you having to do anything more. The new update, however, now introduces the feature to also clone a selection in another file. You cannot use this to move the same selection from one file to another. Of course, this is only one of the many new features that have been introduced since the beta stage. There are also a number of new plug-ins, as well as numerous other applications in the Creative Cloud. The new version is available for Mac and Windows, and like its predecessor it is free. The update takes advantage of Camera RAW 6.5 to create smart previews of the images in the image browser, of course. There are, in addition, new basic effects, such as the Lens Flare tool, a new Shades effect, and a few others. This, of course, is just a tiny glimpse of what the update brings. You can read all about the new effects as well as how to use them in the photoshop.stackexchange.com.

For instance, you can create Effects, Adjustments and Presets, which allow the user to make multiple edits to an image easily. These tools let you save your edits so you can use them again in the future. Well, Adobe Illustrator is nearing its 31 years of being a staple (and if you know me, you'll know how long it's been in my existence as a designer - it's been since about 1990). This is not a surprise given that in fact, Adobe Illustrator is said to be the first Adobe product released from the company's new training wings: the Macromedia and Indesign sister teams. Hey! It's been a long time coming, but we now have something to show here. When it comes to Adobe's flagship vector-based product, Illustrator, we've had a long line of close competitors leading since the EIGHTIES. Fireworks has definitely been the one to beat over the years. Adobe made it more for page layout and more of a design tool. As a result of that, Illustrator has 'won' the market. But here's the thing: The Fireworks team at Adobe have been working on a brand new version of Fireworks that will see Alpha in 2018. They're basically 'bringing it out of the shadows' and making a brand new piece of software to 'take on Illustrator'. There have been a range of details I've been trying to highlight for a while - from their relationship with Intel, to developing a mobile-optimised version, to some software-specific things. Folks have been hearing about it for a while. What is it called? The new Adobe Fireworks
