Keyboard: Ctrl +, Ctrl +Raman spectroscopic study of single-wall carbon nanotubes: evidence of amorphous C-H functional groups. We compare Raman spectroscopy with the standard inelastic electron scattering technique and nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR) spectroscopy in a detailed study of the C(2v) symmetry of single-wall carbon nanotubes (SWNTs). Based on the detailed examination of the Raman spectra of SWNTs by Raman, laser, and photoinduced depletion spectroscopy, we observe the largest in-plane C-H bond vibrational overtone Raman modes in the range of 2580-2690 cm⁻¹. These modes have been previously observed in the NMR spectra of SWNT bundles and can only be attributed to C-H stretching modes of defect-free, solid SWNTs.8.04.2016 BATESVILLE: Rate of communicable diseases highest in Louisiana According to research published today in the early online edition of the peer-reviewed journal Epidemiologic Reviews, many poor and uninsured people in the U.S. would benefit from using health care in a managed-care organization. These findings are new and are based on research involving comparisons of health care utilization and cost in the U.S. and other countries, said Dr. Jack Enders, assistant professor of internal medicine and public health, who led the research team. "Using data from a decade's worth of survey information we found that, while the United States has the highest rate of infectious diseases, it also has the lowest rate of physician visits and the lowest rate of emergency department visits and hospitalizations related to infectious diseases," said Enders, who is also a research fellow at the National Institutes of Health. Specifically, the data show that although the U.S. has the highest rate of communicable diseases, it has the fourth-lowest rate of visits to a physician, the third-lowest rate of emergency department visits, and
