With series polls closing on the 14th of December, there has been much activity that has made a mark on the status of the upcoming elections. There have been speculations as to why the ruling All Progressives Congress (APC) may not be doing well, as millions of Nigerians have been registering for the party. With the ruling party having been roundly criticised, some analysts are blaming the election turnout of the party as the reason for the loss of some of the races. They argue that the low turnout of the party has cut down on the number of votes cast for the party and hence the negative results that it is recording. According to them, in order to ensure victory, the party must be geared towards the outcomes of the latest election. In their view, the party must mobilise its resources to change its fortune, which appears to be going against the APC's plans. Also, the elections in the APC have been conducted well with each
