I am a big fan of Adobe software and have recently upgraded to Lightroom 5.2 and I must say it is a great tool to work with, but it also consumes a lot of your hard drive space. Overall it is a very powerful tool. This review will cover the features that I like and dislike before I rate it 5 stars. It's got some great workflow features, but I wish it was a little bit more user friendly from the get-go. Good thing you can adjust the level of complexity you want to deal with. I can't wait to see what's coming on the horizon. I used the "Edit / Adjustments" tool in Photoshop to quickly return the image (using the criss cross method) to a near-sighted condition. Here, I painted it back into my vision without blowing out the highlights or losing detail. By changing the painting method, not only was I able to correct for my error, but I was also able to try out a new blending method. This is not new. I did this same process many times over in Elements and because it works so well, I get really excited when Photoshop gives me the same thing. In this exciting section of the component, I reviewed the new camera raw and HDR modes that improved tonal rendition and advanced white point to better compensate for camera sensors. Also, the new basic temperature setting is a welcome addition. However, I feel certain settings are missing that I would have loved to see allowed me to work fast. For instance, the tool palette lacks a Fire function. The Nature tool palette lacks the Brush tool that is so important to me.

This is because you're telling Photoshop that you'd like to merge this layer with the layers beneath it.
